Letter from the PTSA President:

Let me start by thanking you for reading the Timberview PTSA newsletter and thus being involved. Whether you know it or not, by taking a moment to read our newsletter you are involving yourself in your student's education and that is much appreciated by the Timberview PTSA.

Before I go further, let me introduce myself. My name is Jeff Overbey and I'm the current president of the Timberview PTSA. First and foremost though, I am a parent of a Timberview High School student and I joined the PTSA because I wanted to be involved.

From my perspective, being involved means building relationships with the administration and the staff, being exposed to the culture that is Timberview, being aware of school activities, sharing in the school's successes and knowing the facts about its problems. PTSA offers this level of involvement.

As you can see, the main theme of this short message is Involvement. Never before has it been more important to be involved in our student's school experience. If you are of my generation, involvement in school by a parent might have meant attending an occasional sporting event, an annual concert or play and then graduation. But in today's world, with the influences our students face each day, involvement means knowing your students' teachers, familiarizing yourself with their daily routine, and understanding the pressures that await them daily at school.

Numerous studies have proven a direct correlation between parental involvement and student performance. Students with involved parents perform better in the classroom, miss fewer days, and end up in the principal's office much less.

Take a moment and measure your involvement in your student's education. Are you involved enough? Can you do more? If you believe you should or you can, contact the PTSA through its website at president@timberviewptsa.com or by calling me at 817-472-0669.

Be involved!

Jeff Overbey, Timberview PTSA President 2007-2008
